WELCOME TO KIRKLAND'S... WHERE HISTORY STILL RIDES WITH US!

Pull up a chair, partner, and take a look around. The walls here have stood through more campfire tales than most folks could count. The bones of this building go all the way back to 1863, when Kirkland was just beginning to find its boots. The “1923” on the front? Those numbers mark the year we rose from the ashes after a little ahem... fiery disagreement involving the local ladies of the night in 1922. Don't worry — these days the only thing spicy around here is the nacho platter.

Just across the road, Virgil Earp once owned the land, keeping a sharp eye on Kirkland's comings and goings. Legend says the Earp brothers stashed their winnings in the old Wells Fargo bank vault hidden right here behind our stage — locked tight inside that massive 1880 Mosler safe you can still spot if you know where to look. Whether it's fact or frontier fiction depends on who's telling it (and how many rounds they've had).

And if the sun sets just right, you might feel a chill that isn't from the desert breeze. Folks around here say Mary still wanders the old hotel and brothel, her door tucked right off the saloon floor. She's our permanent guest, friendly enough — just don't move her chair. Down below, the stacked-stone basement holds its own brand of spirits, both ghostly and bottled, and it's said they like a good time as much as the living do.

Now, under new ownership, Kirkland's is writing a new chapter — one built on the same grit, welcome, and laughter that's defined this place for more than a century. Our goal's simple: when you walk through our doors, you're not just a guest — you're family. The steakhouse kitchen is getting a full renovation and will be back in sizzling style later in 2026.

In the meantime, grab a drink, meet your neighbors, and check out our brand-new World-Class Arena & Event Center, where the music's loud, the horses are fast, and the memories are just beginning.

So sit back, eat up, and raise a glass to the past, present, and the plenty of wild stories still to come. After all, at Kirkland's, the history isn't behind us — it's still unfolding, night by night, right here at your table.
